The Alaska Citizen Review Panel evaluates the policies, procedures, and practices of state and local child protection agencies for effectiveness in discharging their child protection responsibilities. The Panel is mandated through CAPTA 1997 (P.L. 104-235), and enacted through AS 47.14.205.

Report of the 16th National CRP Conference; Phoenix, AZ

Dates of visit	June 06-09, 2016
Members of CRP on the visit	Dana Hallett, Diwakar Vadapalli

For the second consecutive year, Alaska CRP was represented at the National CRP Conference.

The 15th National Citizen Review Panel Conference was attended by approximately 150 individuals, representing 27 different states and territories. Attendees included CRP coordinators, CRP members, state CPS liaisons, and other state personnel that are assigned duties pertaining to CRPs in their respective states. The conference is the only opportunity for panels across the country to meet as a community of practice, exchange best practices, and get updates on developments at the federal level. Conference sessions included several plenaries and breakout sessions covering a variety of topics relevant to the functions and responsibilities of CRPs. Agenda of the conference is included at the end of this report.

The conference was hosted by the Arizona Citizen Review Panels, and the Center for Child Well-Being, a research center within the School of Social Work at Arizona State University (ASU). Attendees from across the nation were welcomed by the Director Greg McKay, Arizona Department of Child Safety, Dean Jonathan Koppell, ASU College of Public Service and Community Solutions, and Judge Maurice Portley, Arizona Court of Appeals. As is often the case with this conference, the host state was most represented, with several members of the state CPS agency attending the conference.

Overall, the conference concluded with the following take-home messages:

- CRPs across the nation vary in their composition, structure, available resources, and the extent to which they are performing their mandated responsibilities.
- CRP is an institution and should be developed as one. It is important that states and their respective CRPs examine the panels' work, and ensure they are meeting the CRP mandate (evaluation, public outreach, and advocacy). States are ultimately responsible for ensuring functional and meaningful CRPs.
- CRPs must examine their structure, budget, and operations to ensure adequate resources to perform their mandated responsibilities.
- The Children's Bureau provides technical assistance to states and CRPs through the National Child Abuse and Neglect Technical Assistance and Strategic Dissemination Center (CANTASD). However, the nature and extent of such technical assistance is unclear.
- It is important for CRPs to continue to connect with the national community through the National CRP Conference, online webinars, email listserve, and any other means available. This helps in ensuring CRPs understand their mandated functions and conduct their activities responsibly.

- States are not only responsible to ensure functional CRPs but also are required to provide necessary data and information as requested by the CRPs.
- Each CRP must have in place, a meaningful and appropriate set of policies and procedures including the following:
 - Operational procedures – guiding the regular operations such as meetings, reporting, membership, confidentiality, etc.
 - A public outreach strategy – including means and methods to collect public comment, collaboration with CPS in raising awareness among the public about CPS procedures, policies, associated opportunities and challenges, and possible roles for public. This should include a media strategy and a strategy to inform elected officials such as state legislature and congressional delegation.
 - Review policies and protocols – establishing protocols for a CRP review
 - Advocacy strategy – clarifying CRP’s role in advocacy vis-à-vis the CPS system, identifying ways and means of such an advocacy, and role of individual members vs. the panel in such an effort.

The conference ended on a task-oriented note. Participants identified one or more tasks that their CRP would pursue for the next year before regrouping for the next annual conference. Alaska CRP, represented by the Chair and Vice Chair, identified a self-evaluation and assessment of effectiveness as our task for the year.

The 2017 National CRP Conference is scheduled in May 10-12, and will be in Anchorage. It will be hosted by the Alaska CRP. The conference committee will include a representative from the National CRP Advisory Panel, the Chair of the 2016 conference, several members of the Alaska CRP, and others interested individuals from Alaska.
